

ABSTRACT:

A method of forming a magnetic resonance image involves separate measurement of the position of a measuring site. The magnetic resonance image is corrected on the basis of the measured position of the measuring site. Notably the temperature is changed at the measuring site, for example for laser ablation of tissue.

Fig. 1

[illegible]